

How a Few Words CAN Cost you your Licence

We've all experienced it. Driving along, maybe a bit tired, or our attention not quite on the speedo, when the flashing blue and red appears in the mirror.

“Good Evening, Sir, do you know what speed you were travelling at?”....The classic trap for the unwary – the police are recording this interview, so that if there is any doubt about your guilt, your confession seals your fate!

If you are in a position where your licence is on maximum points, this could well spell the end of it!

Whilst we don't condone speeding, we're here to tell you that it is wise practice to always maintain a denial at the roadside. It could make the difference between a licence or not if the chips are down.

If challenged, there may be some flaw in the police case. There often is, as police are human too. They are not going to win every case, but your confirmation at the roadside, being admissible in court, may be enough for them to win against you!

You have been warned!
